Last week we reported that Microsoft is suing Autodesk for alleged violations of Microsoft's software patents. Microsoft sued Autodesk in a Seattle federal court for allegedly infringing a host of Microsoft software patents that cover software graphics, software display, and software editing, including methods for navigating and editing a graphical model. We also reported that Autodesk plans to countersue, alleging Microsoft's actions are part of a "coordinated scheme to intentionally destroy Autodesk and harm its customers, while also stealing its valuable software patents," adding that "Autodesk will make its full case in court." Autodesk's statement continues, "Autodesk believes it is entitled to share this information with the public, and to help other companies understand the technology that is widely used in the software industry and that Autodesk invented, and which it expects to use in future products and services." Autodesk asserts that it "developed AutoCAD as a standalone product that would be competitive with the other types of CAD software then available. The company does not license the use of its patents to other software companies." Microsoft's lawsuit claims that Autodesk has been infringing upon patents that it owns relating to the following areas: graphics creation, editing, navigation, use of a wireframe model, use of a segmented display, window management, layout management, and window positioning and tracking. Microsoft has also asserted two basic patent infringement claims: Claims 20, 21, and 22 are for "graphics systems, methods, and graphical user interfaces for use in such graphics systems." Claims 12, 13, 18, 19, and 23 are for "application display information." Among other features, the following claims are asserted against Autodesk: '209 claims the method of Navigating and editing a graph. '177 claims the method of displaying an application screen. '202 claims the method of displaying windows on an application screen. We reported that Microsoft accuses Autodesk of having "failed to properly license and enforce its patents in the field of computer-aided design." Microsoft alleges that Autodesk continues to sell its products that are covered by the patents at issue, but has failed to enforce its patents against others, resulting in a "steadily encroaching software monopoly." In addition, the suit accuses Autodesk of interfering with other

The court agrees with the defendant that there is no jurisdictional basis for the question of which party should pay for the court reporter and reporter's transcript. We also agree with the defendant that we have no jurisdiction to order a change in the place of trial, though we may order the trial to be transferred. It is a matter for the court of proper jurisdiction, should the parties agree, as they have here. In that event, the defendant may ask the court to change the place of trial, and the court would have to transfer the case. However, that order may be with or without the consent of the plaintiff. There is nothing we can do about that. The only other provision in the statute dealing with change of venue, and applicable in this case, is when the defendant moves that a place of trial be set in a county other than the county of the plaintiff's residence. Ark.Code Ann. § 16-114-205 (Supp.1985). That is the basis of the motion made by the defendant, and the court does have the authority to make such an order. On its face, the statute provides no basis for the court to change the place of trial when the court is without power to change the place of trial in the first place. The parties have stipulated that the court has the power to change the place of trial, and the court agrees with them. It is not clear that the statute provides any means of ascertaining whether the plaintiff's residence is in a county other than the county in which the action was filed. The statute is specific as to what a place of trial is, and says nothing as to the residence of the plaintiff. The plaintiff was apparently attempting to file a lawsuit in Jefferson County, which is the county in which the place of trial was stipulated to be. But his residence is in Marion County, so the commands, and palettes. You can choose from a large palette of colors, create your own custom themes, and colorize your dialog boxes and reports. (video: 3:10 min.) Natural language search: Create your own AutoCAD search queries using natural language such as by name, by instance number, or by landmark. You can also search for objects with expressions such as "within", "within tolerance", "near", "nearby", "across", or "around". The new search results panel provides a visual indication of the search results. (video: 2:50 min.) Component Lock: Use this new tool to hide or lock specific objects from other files or other users. Use it to stop or "lock" components or layers that you don't want to see, or to prevent accidental changes. (video: 1:40 min.) Flood Fill: Flood Fill enables you to create holes and remove objects in a drawing with a single click. (video: 2:15 min.) Dynamic Text: Take your text to new heights. AutoCAD 2023 adds Dynamic Text, which you can animate with a variety of built-in effects. (video: 2:00 min.) Auto-tracing for 2D drawing tools: Auto-tracing, which has long been a core feature of AutoCAD, has undergone a major upgrade. Now Auto-tracing is made easy to use with several new tools, like Auto-tracing with Dynamic Text. You can now automatically trace designs using text, font, and color to create 3D models of your designs. (video: 3:10 min.) Auto-Trace with Dynamic Text Auto-tracing with Dynamic Text simplifies the creation of 3D models from 2D drawings. It uses text, font, and color to automatically generate and visualize a 3D model of your design. Auto-Trace with Dynamic Text workflow Drawing: Draw or click to trace Auto-trace: Insert a 2D object such as a dynamic text Annotation: Point out the location of the imported 3D object on the original 2D drawing

New style and color schemes: A fresh set of icons for new applications, menus,
